EXAMPLES OF “MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS”

The following information is being furnished to further assist in defining those safe deposit box items that are not to be reported or remitted.

Pursuant to Chapter 717.117(1)(c), Florida Statutes, items of little or no commercial value shall not be presumed abandoned and do not need to be delivered. The following are examples of some of those items:

- |                           |                                |
|---------------------------|--------------------------------|
| Adoption Documents        | Guns                           |
| Ammunition                | Insurance Policies (All Types) |
| Articles of Incorporation | Keys                           |
| Audio/Video Tapes         | Letters/Notes                  |
| Awards/Diplomas           | Living Trusts                  |
| Bank Books/Passbooks      | Loan papers                    |
| Baptism Certificates      | Marriage Licenses              |
| Bills                     | Medical Documents              |
| Blank or Cancelled Checks | Military Papers                |
| Checkbooks                | Mortgages                      |
| Computer Diskettes        | Motor Vehicle Titles           |
| Contracts                 | Newspaper Clippings            |
| Court Records             | Photographs                    |
| Credit Cards              | Post Cards                     |
| Deeds                     | Promissory Notes               |
| Divorce Documents         | Real Estate Documents          |
| Empty Envelopes           | Tax Returns                    |

The above list contains examples of items not to be reported or remitted, and is not to be considered complete. Other similar papers of a personal nature or items of little or no value may also be included. Conversely, if an item is discovered that is believed to be of collectible value, it should be delivered, (for example: sports memorabilia photos, Civil War documents).

Do Not report or remit boxes having only the above-type items.

Examples of items To Be Delivered that may be similar to the above include:
